

1.The most favorite question: Tell me about yourself?

This question is an all-time favorite for recruiters and one of the essential ones too, as this question helps them to understand you as a person and get to know you better

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- Keep your answer succinct and to the point.
- Be work specific and tell the hiring manager about where you are now professionally, what you have learned from your past work experiences and then talk about what makes you excited about this specific opportunity.
- Do your company research and find out exactly what strengths and qualities this specific company is looking for and in your answer try and show the hiring manager you possess them (You can discover these strengths or qualities in the job description or on their website.)

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- Grab hold of the opportunity this question gives you. This question really lets you guide the interview where you want it to go. This your chance to relate your most impressive success story, so take advantage!
- Highlight a strength that is crucial to the position. (As I mentioned earlier)
- Find out from your company research and from the job description what strengths the company puts a lot of stock into.

3. What Is Your Greatest Weakness?

This classic question freaks people out but it shouldn't. As long as you pick a weakness that isn't a key competency for the job and you show that you have taken steps to "work on it", you will be fine.

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- Show that you are aware of your weakness and what you have done to overcome it.
- Show that you are "self-aware" and that you have the ability to take steps to improve yourself.

4. What do you know about our company?

There is no reason that you shouldn't be able to answer this question. Thanks to the internet, you can easily look up anything you need to know about a company. The recruiter or hiring manager is asking this to see if you've done your research prior to the interview, therefore, make certain that you do

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- The type of product or service the company sells
- How long the company has been in business
- The company's recent accomplishments
- What the company culture is like and how it relates to your values and personality

5. Why Do You Want To Work For Us?

The hiring manager is trying to get at your underlying motivations for wanting this job. Are you here just for a paycheck or do you see yourself becoming an integral part of the company and growing along with it? You need to show them that you want to become "part of the family".

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- Talk about specific things you like about the company. Do your homework before and find out the needs of the company and talk about how you're passionate about "fulfilling those needs".
- Be complimentary. Most people enjoy being flattered. (Just don't go overboard)
- Show how your strengths perfectly align with the job position and company culture.

6. Why Did You Leave Your Last Job?

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- If it was because you left voluntarily then reference a specific characteristic that the company you are interviewing for has that you are attracted to. One that your previous employer didn't have.
- If you were let go, be honest and explain the situation and own it. Explain what you learned from the experience, because the interviewer knows you're human, you make mistakes, and just wants to see that you were able to do something about it
- Words like "downsizing" and "budget cuts" and "bad economy" are good defenses if they are true and are the reasons for departure from the job.

7. What Is Your Greatest Accomplishment?

This is somewhat similar to the "what is your greatest strength?" question and can be handled along the same lines. You want to pick an accomplishment that shows you have the qualities that the company puts value in and that are desirable for the position you're interviewing for.

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- Talk about an accomplishment that exhibits how you will be a perfect fit for the company and for the position you're interviewing for.
- Try and show some genuine passion when you're talking about your accomplishment.

8. Where Do You See Yourself In 5 Years?

This question catches a lot of job seekers off guard because on the surface it seems simple enough but when you dig a little deeper you'll see that there are a couple of traps you could fall into.

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- Demonstrate when you answer the question your level of commitment to the position they are interviewing you for.
- After you have demonstrated your commitment to the role you are interviewing for, outline a realistic growth strategy that is directly tied to the role you're in and the needs and values of the company.
- Stress your interest in a long-term career at the company

9. Describe A Difficult Work Situation And What You Did To Overcome It...

This is one of those pesky behavioral interview questions and is one of the most common. You need to have a "success story" ready to go for this. Relate a story where you dealt with a problem successfully. The key here is to pick a success story that shows you exhibiting the qualities/skills required at the job and company you are interviewing for.

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- Pick an example that shows you tackling a problem that could arise at the new company you're interviewing for. This shows your value.
- Be specific and fairly concise.

• Use the S.T.A.R. Method (Situation, Task, Action, Results)

This is another incredibly common question and it gives you a great opportunity to stand out from the crowd and really show the hiring manager how you can help the company.

The key thing to remember here is: be specific.

To Answer the Questions you should do:

- Show the hiring manager that you are uniquely suited to filling this position. Be the candidate that solves their "problems".
- Show you know some significant details about the company and their general practices because you have researched the firm and are prepared.
- Tell a "success story" that highlights how you have the 'qualities' needed to fill their specific needs.
