

CHAPTER FOUR

RECRUITMENT & SELECTION

4. Introduction

Recruitment and selection constitute a staffing function of management. Scientific selection ensures right man for the right job. For creating a team of efficient, capable and loyal employees, proper attention needs to be given to scientific selection of managers and other employees.

Recruitment and selection involve the process of getting human resources into organizations, departments, sections and jobs use. Usually, recruitment and selection depend on the organization's policy guiding recruitment and selection. The basic principle in selection is "right man for the right job" and can be achieved only through scientific recruitment and selection. This is because the ability of an organization is determined to a great extent by the ability of its workforce.

Recruitment is the process of finding and engaging the people the organization needs. Selection is that part of the recruitment process concerned with deciding which applicants or candidates should be appointed to jobs.

4.1. Employee Recruitment

Recruitment means an activity which refers to the discovery and development of workers and employees in the enterprise at the time they are required. It involves locating, maintaining and contacting the sources of man power. The recruitment has been defined by many eminent authors as under:

In the words of Flippo, "Recruitment is the process of searching for prospective employees and stimulating and encouraging them to apply for jobs in the organization."

According to Dale Yoder, "Recruitment is a process to discover the sources of manpower to meet the requirement of the staffing schedule and to employ effective measures for attracting that manpower in adequate numbers to facilitate effective selection of an efficient working force."

Bayers and Rue: "Recruitment is the process of seeking and attracting a pool of people from which qualified candidates for job vacancies can be chosen."

In short recruitment is the process of searching for prospective employees and stimulating them for jobs in the organization, Thus, the recruitment of employees involves the identification of the sources of personnel, evaluation of different sources available, selection of a particular source and stimulating the prospective candidates to apply for the job so that right candidates may be obtained for right job.

4.1.1. Features of Recruitment

Some of the essential features of recruitment are:

1. Recruitment is a searching and attracting function – It is mainly concerned with searching and attracting the potential candidates towards organization.
2. Recruitment is not a selection – Recruitment involves searching the potential candidates and attracting them towards organization to apply for the job. But selection involves choosing suitable candidate among those who have applied for job.
3. It is a process – Recruitment is a process of series of activities like recruitment policy, sources of recruitment, technique of tapping those sources and evaluation of those sources etc.
4. It is a linking activity – Recruitment brings together those who have a job (employer) and those who search a job (employees)
5. It is a pervasive function – This function needs to be performed by all organizations which need human resources.
6. It is one of the functions of personnel management – It is an important function of personnel management as it helps in acquiring different number and types of persons for continued functioning of an organization.

4.1.2. Purpose of Recruitment

The recruitment process is one of the most fundamental value-added HR Processes. The recruitment is especially critical for managers in the organization. The managers use the recruitment process intensively, and satisfaction with Human Resources is mostly about the satisfaction with the recruitment process. The recruitment process is sensitive to the external and internal changes, and it can be used as the best indicator for the future HR trends. By careful analysis of HR Recruitment Measures, the HR Management team can predict the trends in the job market simply.

Main Recruitment Process Goals The recruitment process is designed to staff the organization with the new employees, and it uses many different recruitment sources to attract the right talent in the defined quality and within a defined time. The recruitment process has several goals:

- Find the best talents for the vacancies
- Manage the recruitment sources
- Manage the vacancies in the organization
- Run the internal recruitment process
- Building the strong HR Marketing platform
- Co-operation with local and international universities
- Provide feedback about the trends in the job market

Most recruitment goals are not visible to managers directly, and they use just sourcing of the job candidates as the main outcome from the recruitment process. HR has to use the other outcomes from the recruitment process as it is the source of valuable information.

4.1.3. Factors governing recruitment

Recruitment is an important function of the Human Resource Management in an organization, and it is governed by a mixture of various factors. Proactive HR Professionals should understand these factors influencing the recruitment and take necessary actions for the betterment of the organization. When the market condition changes, the organization also needs to monitor these changes and discover how it affects the resources and analyze these functions for making recruitment an effective process. We have Internal Factors as well as External Factors that influence the recruitment process.

4.1.3.1. Internal Factors

Organizations have control over the internal factors that affect their recruitment functions. The internal factors are: Size of organization, Recruiting policy , Image of organization, Image of job

- A. Size of Organization: The size of the organization is one of the most important factors affecting the recruitment process. To expand the business, recruitment planning is mandatory for hiring more resources, which will be handling the future operations.
- B. Recruiting Policy: Recruitment policy of an organization, i.e., hiring from internal or external sources of organization is also a factor, which affects the recruitment process. It specifies the objectives of the recruitment and provides a framework for the implementation of recruitment programs.
- C. Image of Organization: Organizations having a good positive image in the market can easily attract competent resources. Maintaining good public relations, providing public services, etc., definitely helps an organization in enhancing its reputation in the market, and thereby attract the best possible resources.
- D. Image of Job: Just like the image of organization, the image of a job plays a critical role in recruitment. Jobs having a positive image in terms of better remuneration, promotions, recognition, good work environment with career development opportunities are considered to be the characteristics to attract qualified candidates.

4.1.3.2. External Factors

External factors are those that cannot be controlled by an organization. The external factors that affect the recruitment process include the following:

- A. Demographic factors: Demographic factors are related to the attributes of potential employees such as their age, religion, literacy level, gender, occupation, economic status, etc.
- B. Labor market: Labor market controls the demand and supply of labor. For example, if the supply of people having a specific skill is less than the demand, then the hiring will need more efforts. On the other hand, if the demand is less than the supply, the hiring will be relative easier.
- C. Unemployment rate: If the unemployment rate is high in a specific area, hiring of resources will be simple and easier, as the number of applicants is very high. In contrast, if the unemployment rate is low, then recruiting tends to be very difficult due to less number of resources.

- D. Labor laws: Labor laws reflect the social and political environment of a market, which are created by the central and state governments. These laws dictate the compensation, working environment, safety and health regulations, etc., for different types of employments. As the government changes, the laws too change.
- E. Legal considerations: Job reservations for different castes such as STs, SCs, OBCs are best examples of legal considerations. These considerations, passed by government, will have a positive or negative impact on the recruitment policies of the organizations.
- F. Competitors: When organizations in the same industry are competing for the best qualified resources, there is a need to analyze the competition and offer the resources packages that are best in terms of industry standards.

4.1.4. Recruitment process

The recruitment process is the first step in creating a powerful resource base. The process undergoes a systematic procedure starting from sourcing the resources to arranging and conducting interviews and finally selecting the right candidates.

- 1. Recruitment Planning: Recruitment planning is the first step of the recruitment process, where the vacant positions are analyzed and described. It includes job specifications and its nature, experience, qualifications and skills required for the job, etc. A structured recruitment plan is mandatory to attract potential candidates from a pool of candidates. The potential candidates should be qualified, experienced with a capability to take the responsibilities required to achieve the objectives of the organization.

The first and foremost process of recruitment plan is identifying the vacancy. This process begins with receiving the requisition for recruitments from different department of the organization to the HR Department, which contains:

- Number of posts to be filled
- Number of positions
- Duties and responsibilities to be performed
- Qualification and experience required

When a vacancy is identified, it the responsibility of the sourcing manager to ascertain whether the position is required or not, permanent or temporary, full-time or part-time, etc. These parameters should be evaluated before commencing recruitment. Proper identifying, planning and evaluating leads to hiring of the right resource for the team and the organization.

Recruitment strategy is the second step of the recruitment plan, where a strategy is prepared for hiring the resources. After completing the preparation of job descriptions and job specifications, the next step is to decide which strategy to adopt for recruiting the potential candidates for the organization. While preparing a recruitment strategy, the HR team considers the following points:

- Make or buy employees
- Types of recruitment
- Geographical area
- Recruitment sources

The development of a recruitment strategy is a long process, but having a right strategy is mandatory to attract the right candidates. The steps involved in developing a recruitment strategy include:

- Setting up a board team
- Analyzing HR strategy
- Collection of available data
- Analyzing the collected data
- Setting the recruitment strategy

2. Searching the right candidate: Searching involves attracting the job seekers to the vacancies. Searching is the process of recruitment where the resources are sourced depending upon the requirement of the job. After the recruitment strategy is done, the searching of candidates will be initialized. This process consists of two steps:

A. Source activation: Once the line manager verifies and permits the existence of the vacancy, the search for candidates starts.

B. Selling: Here, the organization selects the media through which the communication of vacancies reaches the prospective candidates.

3. Screening: Screening starts after completion of the process of sourcing the candidates. Screening is the process of filtering the applications of the candidates for further selection process. Screening is an integral part of recruitment process that helps in removing unqualified or irrelevant candidates, which were received through sourcing. The screening process of recruitment consists of three steps:

A. Reviewing of Resumes and Cover Letters: Reviewing is the first step of screening candidates. In this process, the resumes of the candidates are reviewed and checked for the candidates' education, work experience, and overall background matching the requirement of the job. While reviewing the resumes, an HR executive must keep the following points in mind, to ensure better screening of the potential candidates

- Reason for change of job
- Longevity with each organization
- Long gaps in employment
- Job-hopping
- Lack of career progression

B. Conducting Telephonic or Video Interview: Conducting telephonic or video interviews is the second step of screening candidates. In this process, after the resumes are screened, the candidates are contacted through phone or video by the hiring manager. This screening process has two outcomes

- It helps in verifying the candidates, whether they are active and available.
- It also helps in giving a quick insight about the candidate's attitude, ability to answer interview questions, and communication skills.

C. Identifying the top candidates: Identifying the top candidates is the final step of screening the resumes/candidates. In this process, the cream/top layer of resumes are shortlisted, which makes it easy for the hiring manager to take a decision. This process has the following three outcomes:

- Shortlisting 5 to 10 resumes for review by the hiring managers
- Providing insights and recommendations to the hiring manager
- Helps the hiring managers to take a decision in hiring the right candidate

4. Evaluation and Control: Evaluation and control is the last stage in the process of recruitment. In this process, the effectiveness and the validity of the process and methods are assessed. Recruitment is a costly process, hence it is important that the performance of the recruitment process is thoroughly evaluated.

The costs incurred in the recruitment process are to be evaluated and controlled effectively.

These include the following:

- Salaries to the Recruiters
- Advertisements cost and other costs incurred in recruitment methods, i.e., agency fees.
- Administrative expenses and Recruitment overheads
- Overtime and Outstanding costs, while the vacancies remain unfilled
- Cost incurred in recruiting suitable candidates for the final selection process
- Time spent by the Management and the Professionals in preparing job description, job specifications, and conducting interviews.

Finally, the question that is to be asked is, whether the recruitment methods used are valid or not? And whether the recruitment process itself is effective or not? Statistical information on the costs incurred for the process of recruitment should be effective.

4.1.4. Sources and methods of recruitment

There are different sources of recruitment which are classified under two main categories; Internal Sources and External Sources.

1. Internal Sources of Recruitment

The internal source of recruitment refers to all the sources of recruitment within the company or organization. It usually takes the form of promotion or transfer within the organization. Therefore, internal source of recruitment are employees in the organization.

Internal sources of recruitment are the best and the easiest way of selecting resources as performance of their work is already known to the organization. The most common internal sources of recruitment include:

Transfers: means a change in place of employment without any change in the position, status, salary and responsibility of the employee. Thus, the situation can be filled by transferring an appropriate candidate from the same organization.

Advertisements (Job Posting): Now, the vacancy is promoted within the organization. This involves announcing job openings to all current employees. The current employees are requested to apply for the vacancy. Therefore, recruitment is done from within the organization. Position, location, pay scale and qualifications are described. The means used for announcing the job vacancies can be: Bulletin boards, In-house Newsletters, Circulars/memos, intranet.

- Job bidding: Procedure that permits individuals in organization who believe they are qualified to apply for posted jobs.
- Employee referrals: Supervisors or current employees generally recommend best-qualified candidates for the vacant jobs.

Promotions: means to give a higher position, status, salary and responsibility to employee. Therefore, the post can be filled by promoting an appropriate candidate from the same organization.

Pros and Cons of Internal Sources of Recruitment

Internal sources of recruitment, i.e., hiring employees within the organization, has its own set of advantages and disadvantages. The advantages are as follows:

- It is simple, easy, quick, and cost effective.
- No need of induction and training, as the candidates already know their job and responsibilities.
- It motivates the employees to work hard, and increases the work relationship within the organization.
- It helps in developing employee loyalty towards the organization.

The drawbacks of hiring candidates through internal sources are as follows:

- It prevents new hiring of potential resources. Sometimes, new resources bring innovative ideas and new thinking onto the table.
- It has limited scope because all the vacant positions cannot be filled.
- There could be issues in between the employees, who are promoted and who are not.
- If an internal resource is promoted or transferred, then that position will remain vacant.
- Employees, who are not promoted, may end up being unhappy and demotivated.

2. External Sources of Recruitment

The external source of recruitment refers to all the sources of recruitment outside the company or organization. This source is widely used specially to fill entry-level jobs and acquire skill not owned by current employees.

The most common external sources of recruitment are:

Management Consultants: are used for choosing higher-level staff. They act as representative of the employer. They make all the essential arrangements for recruitment and selection. In return for services, they take a commission or service charge.

Recommendations: The company or organization may also recruit candidates based on the recommendations received from present managers or from sister companies.

Deputation Personnel: The company may also recruit candidates who sent on deputation by the financial institutions or Government or by holding or subsidiary companies.

Campus Recruitment: The organization conducts interviews in the campuses of Engineering Colleges and Management institutes. Final year students, who're soon to get graduate, are interviewed. Suitable candidates are selected by the association based on their communication skills, academic record, intelligence, etc. This source is used for recruiting qualified, trained but inexperienced candidates.

Recruiting Former Employees: Recruiting former employees is a process of internal sources of recruitment, wherein the employees are called back depending upon the requirement of the position. This process is cost effective and saves plenty of time. The other major benefit of recruiting former employees is that they are very well versed with the roles and responsibilities of the job and the organization needs to spend less on their training and development.

Employment Exchanges: As per the law, for certain job vacancies, it is mandatory that the organization provides details to the employment exchange. Employment exchange is a government entity, where the details of the job seekers are stored and given to the employers for filling the vacant positions. This external recruitment is helpful in hiring for unskilled, semi-skilled, and skilled workers.

Public Advertisements: The Personnel branch of an organization advertises the vacancy in the internet, newspapers, etc. This advertisement gives info about the company, the job and the required qualities of the candidate. It offers applications from suitable candidates. This source is the most common and popular source of recruitment. This is because it provides a very wide choice. However, it is very expensive and time consuming.

Employee Referrals: Present employees are well aware of the qualifications, attitudes, experience and emotions of their friends and relatives. They are also aware of the job requirements and organizational culture of their company. As such they can make preliminary judgment regarding the match between the job and their friends and relatives.

Pros and Cons of External Sources of Recruitment

External sources of recruitment, i.e., hiring employees outside an organization, has both its benefits and drawbacks. The benefits are as follows:

- It encourages new opportunities for job seekers.
- Organization branding increases through external sources.
- There will be no biasing or partiality between the employees.
- The scope for selecting the right candidate is more, because of the large number candidates appearing.

The disadvantages of recruiting through external sources are as follows:

- This process consumes more time, as the selection process is very lengthy.
- The cost incurred is very high when compared to recruiting through internal sources.
- External candidates demand more remuneration and benefits.

To conclude, the HR department should be flexible enough to choose between internal or external methods of recruitment, depending upon the requirement of the organization.

4.1.4.1.Alternative to Recruitment

The Alternatives to Recruitment are the temporary ways of hiring people for the job position with a view of saving cost incurred in recruiting process and meet the short-term demand for increased work volume.

The most common alternative to recruitment includes:

- Job enlargement and job enrichment: Job enlargement means combining previously fragmented tasks into one job, again to increase the variety and meaning of repetitive work. On the other hand, Job enrichment goes beyond job enlargement to add greater autonomy and responsibility to a job and is based on the job characteristics approach.
- Overtime- In case the increase in demand of a product/service is temporary.
- Temporary employment- the temporary employees are those who are hired for a specific time period.
- Subcontracting- a certain portion of the work is delegated to other specialized agencies/organization.
- Employee leasing - wherein the permanent employees of other firms are hired due to their specialization in a certain field on a lease basis to meet the short term requirements of the client company.

4.2. Employee Selection

Selection is the process of picking or choosing the right candidate, who is most suitable for a vacant job position in an organization. In other words, selection can also be explained as the process of interviewing the candidates and evaluating their qualities, which are required for a specific job and then choosing the suitable candidate for the position.

The selection of a right applicant for a vacant position will be an asset to the organization, which will be helping the organization in reaching its objectives.

Different authors define Selection in different ways. Here is a list of some of the definitions:

- Selection is the process of choosing the most suitable candidate for a particular position from among the candidates.
- Employee selection is the process of putting the right applicant on the right job.
- Selection of an employee is a process of choosing the applicants, who have the qualifications to fill the vacant job in an organization.
- Selection is a process of identifying and hiring the applicants for filling the vacancies in an organization.
- Employee selection is a process of matching organization's requirements with the skills and the qualifications of individuals.

A good selection process will ensure that the organization gets the right set of employees with the right attitude. Its goal is to properly match people with jobs and organization.

Difference between Recruitment and Selection

Both recruitment and selection work hand in hand and both play a vital role in the overall growth of an organization. The major differences between Recruitment and Selection are as follows:

Recruitment	Selection
Recruitment is defined as the process of identifying and making the potential candidates to apply for the jobs	Selection is defined as the process of choosing the right candidates for the vacant positions.
Recruitment is called as a positive process with its approach of attracting as many candidates as possible for the vacant jobs	Selection is called as a negative process with its elimination or rejection of as many candidates as possible for identifying the right candidate for the position

Importance of Selection

Selection is an important process because hiring good resources can help increase the overall performance of the organization. In contrast, if there is bad hire with a bad selection process, then the work will be affected and the cost incurred for replacing that bad resource will be high.

The purpose of selection is to choose the most suitable candidate, who can meet the requirements of the jobs in an organization, who will be a successful applicant. For meeting the goals of the organization, it is important to evaluate various attributes of each candidate such as their qualifications, skills, experiences, overall attitude, etc. In this process, the most suitable candidate is picked after the elimination of the candidates, who are not suitable for the vacant job.

A good selection process offers the following advantages:

- It is cost-effective and reduces a lot of time and effort.
- It helps avoid any biasing while recruiting the right candidate.
- It helps eliminate the candidates who are lacking in knowledge, ability, and proficiency.
- It provides a guideline to evaluate the candidates further through strict verification and reference-checking.
- It helps in comparing the different candidates in terms of their capabilities, knowledge, skills, experience, work attitude, etc.

4.2.1. Selection criteria

Effective selection process requires:

- Clearly spelled out job description and job specification
- Sufficiently large pool of prospective applicants
- Series of steps through which applicants pass

Right selection improves:

- Human capital of the organization
- Employer-employee relations
- Productivity and commitment of employees

Poor selection leads to:

- Increased employee turnover,
- Absenteeism,
- Job related Accidents
- Job dissatisfaction
- High costs of training and Productivity losses.

4.2.2. The selection processes

The number of steps in the selection process and their sequence will vary, not only with the organization, but also with the type and level of jobs to be filled. Generally, Initial Screening, Employment interviews, Post interview screening, Pre-employment tests, and reaching a selection decision and notifying the candidates are the most common steps of employee selection process.

1. Initial Screening:

The purpose of preliminary screening is to eliminate the totally unsuitable candidates. It is generally brief and may take place across the counter in the employment office of the company. It consists of a short exchange of information regarding the candidate's age, qualifications experience and interests, it helps to determine whether it is worthwhile for the candidate to fill in an application form. It saves the expense of processing unsuitable candidates and saves the candidate from the trouble of passing through the long procedure. Preliminary interview provide basic information about candidates. While providing important information, applications and curriculum vitae of the candidate tend not to be extremely useful for making final selection decisions.

Applications are sifted by comparing the information available about them with the key criteria in the person specification. The criteria should be analyzed with care so that they are fully understood. The criteria can be classified under the following three headings so that they can be applied consistently to guide sifting decisions:

1 Essential – applicants will not be considered unless this criterion is satisfied.

2 Very desirable – preference will be given to applicants who meet this criterion.

3 Desirable – applicants who meet this criterion will be given favorable consideration but it is not an essential requirement. However, if a number of applicants meet the first two criteria, satisfying desirable criteria would be a factor in making a choice.

- Preliminary Evaluation of Application Forms to check whether there is a match between the applicants' qualification and the vacant position.

The main purpose of application form :

- To aid as a pre-employment screening tool.
- Helps to collect consistent information about candidates.
- Provides an important input in determining whether the applicant satisfies the minimum requirement set by the organization and the relative strength of a job applicant.

Application forms consist of information about:

- Personal background information: Name, gender, age, marital status, nationality etc.
- Qualifications: Educational, professional and other qualifications and specialized skills.
- Work Experience: Experience in previous jobs; duties, responsibilities, etc.
- References: Names and addresses of persons who can be contacted for references.

- Internet checks- check online social networking sites before deciding whether or not to invite them for an actual face-to-face interview.
- Preliminary or screening interview - Short video or phone interviews usually conducted by HR personnel, to narrow down the field and save decision makers time by eliminating candidates who are not likely to be hired.

2. Employment Interview

An employment interview is a process in which one-on-one session is conducted with the applicant to know a candidate better. It helps the interviewer to discover the inner qualities of the applicant and helps in taking a right decision.

The major purpose of interview is to assess the candidates in the following areas:

- Ability to do the job
- Motivation and eagerness to do the job
- Ability to 'fit-in' with the organization
- Personality and interpersonal skills
- Ability to work under pressure (stress)

Types of Interviews

Depending up the requirements, situations, locations and time, the interviews are broadly classified into ten different categories. Recruiters should be knowledgeable enough to understand which type of interview should be used when.

1. Structured interviews

A structured interview is one based on a defined framework. Within the framework there may be a set of predetermined questions. All candidates are asked the same questions, which will focus on the attributes and behaviors required to succeed in the job. The answers may be scored through a rating system.

A structured Interview is a set of standardized questions based on critical Factors to a person's job performance and an established set of answers against which applicant responses can be rated, it provides a more consistent basis for evaluating job candidates.

2. Unstructured interviews

Unstructured interviews are essentially a general discussion during which the interviewer asks a few questions that are relevant to what he or she is looking for but without any specific aim in mind other than getting an overall picture of the candidate as an individual. Questions are often random and non-specific. Candidates are judged on the general impression they make and the process is likely to be quite subjective.

3. Group Interview:

In this type of interview, all the candidates or a group of candidates are interviewed together. Group interviews are conducted to save time when there is a large number of applications for a few job vacancies. A topic will be given to discuss among the candidates and the interviewer judges the innovativeness and behavior of each candidate in the group.

4. Depth Interview:

Depth interview is a semi-structured interview, where the candidates have to give a detailed information about their education background, work experience, special interests, etc. And the interviewer takes a depth interview and tries in finding the expertise of the candidate.

5. Stress Interview:

Stress interviews are conducted to discover how a candidate behaves in stressful conditions. In this type of interview, the interviewer will come to know whether the candidate can handle the demands of a complex job. The candidate who maintains his composure during a stress interview is normally the right person to handle a stressful job.

6. Individual Interview:

In an individual interview, the interview takes place one-on-one i.e., there will be a verbal and a visual interaction between two people, an interviewer and a candidate. This is a two-way communication interview, which helps in finding the right candidate for a vacant job position.

7. Informal Interview:

Such interviews are conducted in an informal way, i.e., the interview will be fixed without any written communication and can be arranged at any place. There is no procedure of asking questions in this type of interview, hence it will be a friendly kind of interview.

8. Formal Interview:

A formal interview held in a formal way, i.e., the candidate will be intimated about the interview well in advance and the interviewer plans and prepares questions for the interview. This is also called as a planned interview.

9. The Behavioral Description Interview (BDI)

- In contrast to a situational interview, a behavioral description interview focuses on actual work incidents in the interviewee's past. The BDI format asks the job applicant what he or she actually did in a given situation.
- Is based on the assumption that past performance is the best predictor of future performance.
- More effective for hiring higher-level positions such as general managers and executives.
- Is less susceptible to applicant faking.

3. Post interview screening

Reference checking- can be done through telephone or through emailing /faxing/ mailing a questionnaire

- What were the applicant's title , responsibilities, the start and end dates of the applicant's employment?
- In what areas did the applicant excel? In what areas did the applicant need improvement?
- How well does the applicant communicate with and get along with others?
- How does the applicant deal with conflicts and stress?
- Did the applicant miss a lot of work?
- For what reason did the applicant leave your organization?
- Would you rehire the applicant?

4 Pre-employment test

Pre employment test is an objective and standardized measure of a sample of behavior that is used to gauge a person's knowledge, skills, and other characteristics relative to other individuals.

- Job knowledge test: a type of achievement test designed to measure a person's level of understanding about a particular job.
- Work sample tests, or job sample tests: require the applicant to perform tasks that are actually a part of the work required on the job.
- Cognitive ability tests : measure mental capabilities such as general intelligence, verbal fluency, numerical ability, and reasoning ability.

- Biodata Tests: Candidates are questioned about events and behaviors that reflect attitudes, experiences, interests, skills, and abilities that correlate with on-the-job success. Is based on the assumption that past behavior is the best predictor of future behavior.
- Sample Biodata questions:-
 - “How many books have you read in the last 6 months?” or
 - “How often have you put aside tasks to complete another, more difficult assignment?”
- Personality Tests: They measure personality dimensions of the candidates. Measure disposition and temperament. The “Big Five” factors that summarize personality traits are the following:
 1. Extroversion: the degree to which someone is talkative, sociable, active, aggressive, and excitable.
 2. Agreeableness: the degree to which someone is trusting, amiable, generous, tolerant, honest, cooperative, and flexible.
 3. Conscientiousness: the degree to which someone is dependable and organized in tasks.
 4. Low Neuroticism: the degree to which someone is secure, calm, independent, and autonomous.
 5. Openness to experience: the degree to which someone is intellectual, philosophical, insightful, creative, artistic, and curious.
- Medical examination- is generally given to ensure that the health of an applicant is adequate to meet the job requirements. It also provides a baseline against which subsequent medical examinations can be compared and interpreted. The latter objective is particularly important in determinations of work-caused disabilities.
- Interest Tests: They are inventories of the likes and dislikes of candidates in relation to work, hobbies, recreational activities etc. The assumption is that interests and job satisfaction are correlated.

5. Reaching a selection decision

The decision to accept or reject applicants requires systematic consideration of all the relevant information about applicants. Summary forms and checklists can be used to facilitate the process.

Notifying the result: notify candidates both who are chosen and not chosen for the position.

The decision to accept or reject applicants requires systematic consideration of all the relevant information about applicants. Summary forms and checklists can be used to facilitate the process.

4.3.Socialization

- Refers to a process of helping new employees adapt to their new organizations and work responsibilities.
- Process by which an individual comes to appreciate the values, abilities, expected behaviors, and social knowledge essential for assuming an organizational role and for participating as an organizational member.

Stages of Socialization

Pre-arrival stage

This stage recognizes that individuals arrive in an organization with a set of organizational values, attitudes, and expectations.

Encounter stage

The socialization stage where individuals confront the possible contradiction between their organizational expectations and reality.

If expectation and reality differ, new employees must be socialized to detach them from their previous assumptions. However, some new members may become totally disillusioned with the actualities of their jobs and resign.

Metamorphosis stage

The socialization stage during which the new employee must work out inconsistencies discovered during the encounter stage.

Socialization is complete when new members become comfortable with the organization and their work teams. They internalize coworker and organization norms, and they understand and accept these norms.

4.3.1. Orientation and Induction

Induction- is the process of receiving and welcoming employees when they first join a company.

Orientation- A procedure for providing new employees with basic background information about the firm.

Induction- is the process of receiving and welcoming employees when they first join a company. Includes Company overview:

- Mission, Vision, Values
- History and clients
- hierarchy
- Policies
- Company rules (dress code, Business conduct guideline)

Orientation- A procedure for providing new employees with basic background information about the firm.

- Workplace tour and Formal meetings with teams and departments.
- Information of procedures and processes
- Information of work assignment/ job, clients
- Introduction to team members and key contacts.
- Information about employment terms and conditions

Aim of Induction AND Orientation

- Make new employees feel welcome and at home and part of the team
- Help new employees understand the organization in a broad sense and the basic information to function effectively, such as e-mail access, password, and company rules
- To teach new employees learn the behaviors and attitudes they need to be successful in the organization
- To establish quickly a favorable attitude to the company in the mind of the new employee so that he or she is more likely to stay
- To obtain effective output from the new employee in the shortest possible time
- To reduce the likelihood of the employee leaving quickly